Can we make a difference
in the modern world?

Nowadays a lot of people are convinced that it is impossible to change our world and society. They insist that due to the giant population of the Earth their lives are not significant at all.

I strongly disagree with that opinion. To my mind every person and every action matter. Every kind thing can make the modern world, ~~even~~ slightly, ~~but~~ better, in other words, change it. The most important thing is to believe and ~~to~~ never forget that you can do this. After all, you never know, what your actions can lead to.

Volunteers are the example of how people change our world. These are the people who help children, veterans, ~~and~~ animals, homeless, disabled not asking for anything in return. They organize ~~con~~ or help in organization of ~~some~~ concerts, festivals and other events. Volunteers are those, who make our planet a better place.

In conclusion I would like to underline the importance of not giving up the attempts of changing the world. We ought not to lose faith in our power and significance and then we will be able to make a difference in the modern world.

3. Read the extract from "Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's stone" by J. Rowling and answer the questions::

The Dursleys got into bed. Mrs. Dursley fell asleep quickly but Mr. Dursley lay awake, turning it all over in his mind. His last, comforting thought before he fell asleep was that even if the Potters were involved, there was no reason for them to come near him and Mrs. Dursley. The Potters knew very well what he and Petunia thought about them. He couldn't see how he and Petunia could get mixed up in anything that might be going on -- he yawned and turned over -- it couldn't affect them...

How very wrong he was.

Mr. Dursley might have been drifting into an uneasy sleep, but the cat on the wall outside was showing no sign of sleepiness. It was nearly midnight before the cat moved at all.

A man appeared on the corner the cat had been watching, appeared so suddenly and silently you'd have thought he'd just popped out of the ground. The cat's tail twitched and its eyes narrowed.

Nothing like this man had ever been seen on Privet Drive. He was tall, thin, and very old, judging by the silver of his hair and beard, which were both long enough to tuck into his belt. He was wearing long robes, a purple cloak that swept the ground, and high-heeled, buckled boots. His blue eyes were light, bright, and sparkling behind half-moon spectacles and his nose was very long and crooked, as though it had been broken at least twice. This man's name was Albus Dumbledore.

Albus Dumbledore didn't seem to realize that he had just arrived in a street where everything from his name to his boots was unwelcome. He did seem to realize he was being watched, because he looked up suddenly at the cat, which was still staring at him from the other end of the street. For some reason, the sight of the cat seemed to amuse him. He chuckled and muttered, "I should have known."

He found what he was looking for in his inside pocket. It seemed to be a silver cigarette lighter. He flicked it open, held it up in the air, and clicked it. The nearest street lamp went out with a little pop. He clicked it again -- the next lamp flickered into darkness. Twelve times he clicked the Put-Outer, until the only lights left on the whole street were two tiny pinpricks in the distance, which were the eyes of the cat watching him. If anyone looked out of their window now, even beady-eyed Mrs. Dursley, they wouldn't be able to see anything that was happening down on the pavement. Dumbledore slipped the Put-Outer back inside his cloak and set off down the street toward number four, where he sat down on the wall next to the cat. He didn't look at it, but after a moment he spoke to it.
