People usually have pets, but have you ever asked a question: "Why do people have pets?" If you have a pet, you know that it's really nice when you play with them and etc. But on the other hand you must pay ~~all your attention on~~ them all your attention.

For example, I have a dog. It's really nice. His name is Masia. I really love him, but ~~then~~ ^{wh} he starts doing something ~~bad~~ but I can be really angry. By the way, I'm not alone with this problem. I know a lot of people ~~whose~~ who have pets and they also can be really angry and disappointed with them, but they love them and usually their pets are members of family.

I think people have pets not just for fun. They have them to say ^{them} something that they can't say to people, I think.
